BUILDING OUR FUTURE

Course Overview

This two-day, industry-relevant workshop focuses on breaking down traditional 'adversarial' environments that many projects endure, replacing it with fresh knowledge and skills that will guide the implementation of strong collaborative relationship management approaches. An interactive case study is used throughout the course to assist learning.

Target Audience

For those involved in project management and delivery – a practical and applicable approach to relationship management in project delivery.

Course Outline

- History of project and relationship management
- Human dynamics operating in projects
- Impacts of relationships of project outcomes
- Identifying project risks from impacts
- Developing a relationship management plan

Course Objectives

At the end of the course participants will be able to:

- Compare 'old' and 'new' project delivery systems
- Identify the critical importance of human relationships and behaviours that impact on project delivery
- Explore the benefits of relationship management principles in projects
- Identify strengths and weaknesses in project relationships and manage them
- Address client management issues
- Develop processes to identify and manage relationship risk in a project
- Utilise tools to implement relationship management principles
- Identify how to develop this new approach through the organisation.

Expert Presenter

Jeff Cowan is an expert in project management and has specific experience in program management for large scale infrastructure projects. Jeff has extensive experience and a practical approach in his delivery of relationship management for project managers involved with engineering and construction projects.

Jeff also has extensive experience in developing and delivering project management professional development within engineering and government organisations. Jeff also lectures in Project Management at QUT in Undergraduate and Masters programs.
