Serious about sustainability
In addition to presenting a number of sessions on sustainable construction for the future at its Clients Driving Innovation: Benefiting from Innovation conference at the Surfers Paradise Marriott Resort & Spa on 12-14 March, Construction Innovation aims to deliver a sustainable conference by offsetting the estimated greenhouse gas emissions generated by this event.

International interest in safety guidelines
The CRC’s Guide to Best Practice for Safer Construction continues to receive interest and endorsement in Australia and overseas. Associate Professor Helen Lingard from RMIT’s Property Construction and Project Management School, delivered a workshop on international developments in safety and worker engagement for senior executives of CRC partner Arup in Hong Kong recently.

From the CEO’s desk

R&D Review Welcome
I welcome the wide-ranging review of Australia’s national innovation system, as announced recently by the Minister for Innovation, Industry, Science and Research, Senator Kim Carr – and, in particular, the renewed focus on industry development and public good outcomes for the CRC Program.

The Australian property, design, construction and facilities management industry, with its tight deadlines and culture of disjointed knowledge sharing along the supply chain, has traditionally been reticent to take a long-term and industry-wide view of R&D.

However, I believe the will is now there to tackle problems collaboratively at a national, state and local level — which is important as it takes motivated people, not just policy, to affect cultural change.

This is where Construction Innovation — with its 27 industry, government and research partners — plays a vital role. In our unique position as national facilitator of industry R&D development, we have achieved several recent outcomes of national and international significance that demonstrates the impact people can achieve by working together.
